SCRIPTURE

Genesis 31-33, Hebrews 13:5

ICEBREAKER & OPENING THOUGHT

These questions will get your group talking about the main idea of the discussion. Have them explore what it means to have control of your life. We may easily use that language, but what does it mean and what could it mean to allow God to have that control instead?

BIBLE DISCUSSION & LIFE APPLICATION

A lot is happening in this passage, so to help bring some clarity and direction for discussion and life application, we’ve included a portion of John Goldingay’s commentary (Genesis for Everyone) on Genesis here as a resource to you.

“So why is God wrestling with Jacob? God has been doing that all Jacob’s life, trying to turn Jacob into the man God wants him to be but failing. Here is God trying again but succeeding only by cheating, which means the victory is hollow. Perhaps one reason God appears as just a man is that this makes it a fair fight. If God overwhelms us simply through having superior firepower, it’s not much use as a victory. God has to “win us,” as we say. We have to want to yield to God’s purpose and God’s vision for us if the change in us is to be authentic. But Jacob does not want to yield, and never does.

“God does bless him and gives him a new name that epitomizes his nature. As is often the case, the comment about the names has some subtleties about it. It links Jacob’s new name with the fact that he is the great fighter. And yes indeed, Jacob is a person who keeps fighting with God to stay the man he is. In the end, God lets him do that because even God cannot force people to change. God strives to get a person like Jacob to become the kind of person he could be and should be and that God wants him to be, and keeps at it in this struggle with Jacob.

“Once more we need to recall that the audience of this story is Jacob, is Israel. And insofar as the church comes to share in Israel’s relationship with God, we recall that we too are Jacob, we are Israel. We are a people whose nature is to struggle with God to avoid becoming the people we could be and a people with whom God continues to struggle to try to take us there.”

CHALLENGE

In Hebrews 13:5 we read, “Never will I leave you, never will I forsake you. Jacob heard that same promise from God – that God would fight for him (Gen 31:3). We have that same promise today. Let’s spend a few moments in prayer surrendering ourselves to God so that we might walk more confidently in him.
